

ABSTRACT

A display device and method for its manufacture. In a display device with a first array of individual display elements and a second array of control transistors for the display elements, control transistors are formed from a semiconductor material with a large band gap and are transparent in the visible spectral range. The invention also comprises a method for manufacturing such a display device.

5

50142895.doc